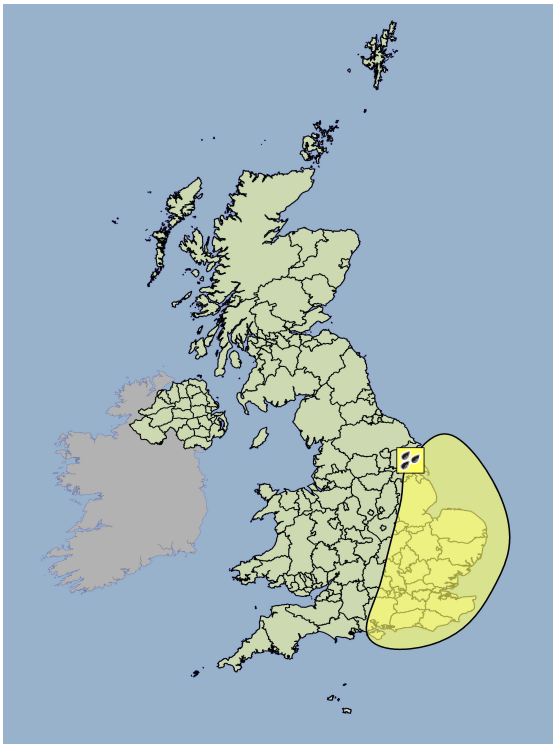
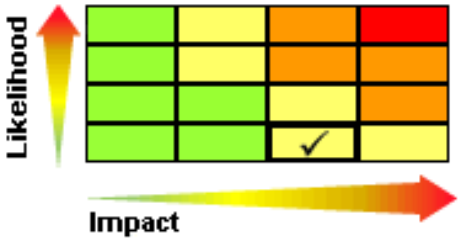
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of very warm air is expected to move northwards from France early on Friday to affect southeastern parts of Britain. This is likely to provide a focus for locally intense thundery downpours which could give 15 mm of rain in less than an hour and perhaps as much as 30 mm.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 02:00 on Fri, 05th Jun 2015 until 20:50 on Fri, 05th Jun 2015

Scattered thunderstorms are likely to extend northwards across eastern and southeastern areas of England during Friday giving some localised intense downpours. The public should be aware of the risk of localised surface water flooding which may lead to disruption to transport and outdoor activities. Frequent lightning could prove to be an additional hazard.

The thunderstorms should clear away eastwards on Friday night.

As is typical of this type of situation there is considerable uncertainty regarding extent and timing of any thunderstorms, with some places within the warning area probably escaping the downpours. Therefore this warning will be kept under review and updated as necessary.
